reggae-dub-tech-step

awesome shiftings are actually happening in electronic music. a couple of supposed well-known subgenres are suddenly gathering speed and develop into completely unexpected directions. fresh melodies are implemented where previously a dry and uninspired purism was ruling. basslines start to swing by climbing down into the darkest abysses. seemingly unsuitable aesthetic elements are transplanted from one genre to another. the outcome is a tremendous listening experience where almost anything goes.

providing an up-to-date dj-set nowadays means to be able to handle generously a wide and easy available musical legacy. it means to break out of superfluous borders, finding one's own convincing, powerful and relieved soundline. this is what new.com (p45/comfortnoise/dub_ex_machina) tracked down in p45 radio's august-08-show, partly perfectly matched by mc killah_flex' rhymes and shout-outs. forget all your former ideas about music-genres and subgenres. awake to the fact that the distinction between techno, house, reggae and dubstep isn't working any more. - just listen to this dubwise crossover, and perk up your ears!
